LEGISLATIVE

The legislative branch of government, primarily the U.S. Congress (House & Senate) is responsible for making laws, controlling taxing and spending, declaring war, and overseeing the Executive Branch, ensuring a balance of power as outlined in the Constitution. It's a bicameral system with the Senate (2 per state, 100 total) and the House of Representatives (population-based, 435 members working together to pass legislation.

Key Functions

• Lawmaking: Drafts, debates, and passes proposed laws (bills)

• Budget: Controls government funding and programs.

•Oversight: Holds hearings and investigates the executive branch.

• Confirmation: Approves or rejects presidential appointments (judges, agency heads).

Roles of the U.S governing bodies within the federal government

THE GOVERNING BODIES WITHIN THE U.S. FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ARE REFERRED TO AS THE BRANCHES OF GOVERNMENT

Checks and balances are crucial in our government to prevent any single branch (legislative, executive, judicial) from becoming too powerful. The Executive Branch checks the Legislative Branch by vetoing laws passed by Congress, while checking the Judicial by appointing federal judges. The Legislative branch (Congress) checks the Executive branch by controlling funding, and it checks the Judicial branch by confirming judges. The Judicial Branch checks the Executive and Judicial primary through Judicial Review. In the last five years an example of one branch checking another is the Judicial Branch checking the Executive Branch when federal courts (Judicial) blocked or limited President Trump's executive actions like travel bans or border wall funding as exceeding presidential authority. If the Judicial Branch had not intervened, this would have created a constitutional crisis by undermining the checks and balances system and the rule of law. In the future I believe that its going to be difficult for the Judicial Branch to maintain its essential function as an impartial interpreter of the Constitution and protector of rights, affecting both its internal operations and public perception.

EXECUTIVE

The primary responsibility of the U.S. Executive Branch, led by the president, is to implement and enforce the laws written by Congress, acting as head of state, leader of the government and Commander-in-Chief. This involves overseeing federal agencies, appointing officials, directing foreign policy, managing the budget, and issuing executive orders, while also serving as the face of the nation.

Key Functions

• Law Enforcement: Carries out and enforces federal laws through various departments and agencies

• Executive Orders: Issues directives (E https://www.usa.gov/branches-of-government executive Orders) to guide federal agencies.

MAIN POWER OF EACH BRANCH

1. Legislative (Congress: makes laws)
2. Executive (President, VP, Cabinet: enforces laws)
3. Judicial (Courts: interprets laws)

The U.S. Constitution establishes a system of “separation of powers” that divides the federal government into three distinct, coequal branches to ensure that no single group or person gain too much authority.

This structure also incorporates a system of checks and balances allowing each branch to monitor and limit the powers of the others.

JUDICIAL

The judicial branch's main responsibility is to interpre laws, applying them to real situations deciding if laws violate the Constitution (judicial review) and settling legal disputes, thereby upholding the rule of law and protecting rights, with the Supreme Court as the high auth-ority setting precedents for lower courts. It serv as a crucial check on the legislative and executive branche,ensuring they operate within constitutional limits.

Key Functions

Interpreting Laws: Deciding the meaning of laws pass congress and applied by Executive Branch

Proctecting Rights: Sageguarding individual rights gu aranteed by the Constitution and state Constitutions
